GROWING YOUR BEST TOMATOES... ...AND OTHER SPRING / SUMMER VEGETABLES!!!

On March 10, we will be entertained and educated on growing tomatoes (and other warm season veggies) by Sylmar Charter High School agriculture teacher Steve List. Throughout this program he will be encouraging a u d i e n c e questions, as his main focus is on sharing knowledge to help us all grow the best veggies we are capable of. He would like webinar attendees to “bring their toughest questions” so he can tailor the program to address our needs, instead of focusing on just the basics.

First and foremost, List is a teacher, but he is also a landscaper and an Urban Garden Lecturer for the City of L.A. and is a popular personality on YouTube. (Links to some videos featuring List follow at end of this article.) For the past 15 years, he has been cultivating high school horticulturists – teaching his students about urban agriculture, nutrition, edible landscaping and more.

Since taking over the Sylmar Charter’s neglected two-acre Agriculture Center,

List and his students have launched a green revolution of flowers, fruits and vegetables across the northeast San Fernando Valley. To date, he and his young horticulturists have designed, built and given away 500-plus raised-bed gardens for families without fresh fruits and veggies, ensuring that a lot of Angelenos are able to benefit from growing and eating freshly picked produce.

List freely proclaims, “This is my dream, my calling”. We are looking forward to benefitting from his dedication as an educator and learning something new about cultivating healthy, home-grown produce. Prepare your questions now and please join us for this seasonally-appropriate webinar that will ready us for spring vegetable planting! Registration is now open at: www.socalhort.org.

Learn more about Steve List on his Facebook page at: www.facebook.com/steve.asklist, or visit his “Ask Mr. List” YouTube channel (follow link below). We have also included a couple of the many YouTube videos that he is featured in.

On February 10 the SCHS hosted Suzanne Simard, Professor of Forest Ecology at the University of British Columbia and the leader of The Mother Tree Project, as our speaker in this year's installment of the Ruth Borun Lecture Series. The evening's presentation was drawn from the research that led to the publication of her latest book, Finding the Mother Tree, which explores the ways in which trees communicate, learn and adapt their behaviors with a sophistication typically ascribed to humans.

Dr. Simard grew up, and currently works in, heavily-forested areas of British Columbia, where her early experiences with standard forestry industry practices set her on the path culminating in her ground-breaking research. Over 30 years ago, she – and others – recognized that clear-cutting sections of forests to plant tree monocultures was destroying biodiversity and creating “holes” in the environment, inviting in pathogens, destructive insects, weeds, etc. Simard then began to question what might be happening to soil structures as well, leading to her extensive research on mycorrhizal fungi networks.

She cited David Reed's lab work in Britain, showing how trees can be linked by mycorrhiza and pass carbon between them, as an early inspiration into her work on tree communication. Despite publishing her research since the 1990s (over 170 scientific articles in journals to date), it wasn't until Dr. Simard began mapping sections of old-growth forests and did DNA testing on the fungal links among roots that her work became more widely recognized and accepted.

Understanding how “mother trees” nurture younger plants by processing the greatest amount of nutrients, sunlight, water, etc. and then distribute these for the communal good via their extensive root systems, has global ecological implications. Wide dissemination of this knowledge can aid, not only in efforts to regenerate (and sustain) forest ecosystems, but also to protect against fires and to sequester carbon.

If you would like to learn more, you can read about Dr. Simard at her website: www.suzannesimard.com, or click here for a link to purchase her book.

SCHS ENCOURAGES SUPPORT OF LOCAL ORGANIZATIONS

SCHS members have far-reaching connections to the horticultural community throughout Southern California and beyond, including the organizations listed above. As such, we offer support when the need arises and would like to encourage members to provide assistance - financial or otherwise - if they are able.

During the strong winds of late January, California Botanic Garden experienced severe damage, including the loss of 70 mature trees. They were closed for a month and just reopened February 26. If you would like to contribute to their rebuilding efforts you can find more information at: www.calbg.org/support/donate.

When we are able to resume in-person meetings they will be held at Friendship Auditorium, 3201 Riverside Drive, Los Angeles CA 90027. (Hybrids will be shown simultaneously online via Zoom and Facebook Live.)
